Senators perched in their seats at Washington do not realize this change. They visit their homes at long intervals and have little intercourse with the masses. Mr. Lecky, in his history of rationalism in Europe, says the clergy were the last to be moved by the modified views of the masses in the matter of religious conviction and church creeds. The same is true in changes of political sentiment. The members of the lower House who come in close contact with the people have ascertained their wishes and have reflected them in their votes. Only the Senator can finally withstand.
